YOUR COLLEGE ESSAY

Things have changed a great deal from the time when communication was limited to quills and parchment paper. Computers now allow us to instantly check grammar, spelling and garbled thoughts. However, writing a college essay continues to be a challenging task.

Colleges are hoping to find out more about you that is not already evident in your application. In addition to demonstrating your ability to write, colleges want to get some sense of who you are. How do you see the world? What is important to you? Effective essays go beyond superficial impressions and delve into the how and why. You can write a wonderful college essay about a seemingly inconsequential event. The trick is to tell your own personal story in such a way as to reveal something about you.

Probably the most important tip for writing a successful college essay is to start early. It is difficult to write well when you are stressed about the looming deadlines. You will want to take plenty of time to refine your thoughts and proof-read thoroughly. Reading your essay out loud can help you find minor typos. It is wise to have someone else read it, too. Here are some other tips to help you write a masterpiece:

Things to do. Be yourself. Choose an experience that is meaningful to you and write what you feel. Put your mind into motion by revisiting childhood memories. Read a children's story or two. Try to capture the main idea in one sentence before sitting down to write. Use the words that you normally use when speaking, rather than lofty vocabulary and syntax. Accentuate the positive and use details. Write clearly and thoroughly. If a detail sounds vague, change it. Sift through the essay and cut out the unnecessary words such as many and very.

Things to avoid. Trying to be cute, sounding older or more sophisticated than you are should be avoided. Your essay should sound like you, a 17 year old a professional with 20 years' experience. Be careful of overextending yourself by making your topic too broad or too philosophical. There is a word limit to most essays, so being concise with your topic can keep your essay focused. Slang and swear words have no place in a college essay, neither do contractions. Avoid repeating information in your essay that is already included in a different part of your application.

A well written essay, free of grammatical mistakes and typos sends the message that you are a serious candidate deserving serious consideration.

“IN THE MIST OF CHOOSING COLLEGES”

The following are bloopers from admissions essays received by Bates College in Lewiston, Maine:

- If there was a single word to describe me, that would have to be ‘perfectionist’.
- I was abducted into the national honor society.
- I function well as an individual and a group.
- I want to be fully bilingual in three or more languages.
- I proliferate with English courses.
- I can read, speak and write fluently in Greek. My other sports are tennis and volleyball.
- I have taken many curses in literature and writing.
- At night we stayed in a youth hostile.
- I have never been to New England, but from what I’ve heard it is a beautiful country.
