SEARCHING FOR MONEY

Did you know that 95-98% of all money awarded to help students pay for college comes from financial aid and college funds? Private scholarships only account for very little of the total funds available to help students pay for college.

Colleges with a high cost of attendance usually have the most money available to give away in the form of scholarships and grants. For example, this year it costs over $67,000 to attend Dartmouth College. However, the average grant award for the class of 2021 was $46,315. Families with an annual income less than $100,000 received only grant money and work study in their financial aid package meaning students and parents were not required to take out loans! The average amount of student debt for graduates was just over $16,000.

Claremont McKenna, another private school that is not quite as selective as the Ivies, costs around $64,000 per year. Families whose income was between $50,000-$75,000 received an average financial package of $57,000. About $2,500 of that amount is work study, the rest is awarded through grants that do not have to be repaid.

Aside from need-based aid, there is an abundance of merit-based aid available from colleges all over the country. Hastings College has scholarships based on a student's performance in high school that can cover the full cost of tuition. Iowa State gives automatic scholarships based on GPA and test scores with no application required. UCCS has a Chancellor's Award in the amount of $2,500 that students automatically receive upon admission, if their GPA is at least 3.2 and they have a minimum of a 23 on the ACT.

Colleges reward students who are assertive and on top of things. In other words, applications are submitted well before deadlines and students have researched scholarship options, requirements and deadlines. Additional essays or applications may be required for some institutional scholarships; not all are automatically awarded.

The importance of preserving the civil jury system for future generations.* For more information, go to www.burgsimpson.com/scholarship Deadline: Jan. 24

FINANCIAL AID TERMS & DEFINITIONS

FAFSA: (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) The form used to apply for federal financial aid programs as well as access other money available from state & college resources.

CSS/PROFILE: A financial aid application required by private colleges to supplement the information received on the FAFSA. Can be filled out NOW! See the College Counselor for more information.

SAR: Student Aid Report—results of the FAFSA analysis. Report includes a recap of information submitted by the student/family, including the EFC. Results are electronically forwarded to designated colleges & are used to determine the Financial Aid package.

EFC: Expected Family Contribution. Amount reported on SAR in upper right hand corner.

COA: Cost of Attendance The total amount an institution determines it will cost a student to attend for a one year. Some schools include everything (transportation, medical insurance, etc.), whereas others limit it to tuition, fees, books, room & board, personal expenses. Be sure to compare “apples to apples” when looking at financial aid packages.
